with PS

RIP Mary!

When we're lucky, we find that work, passion and respect can transform our professional relationships into friendships. Too often, however, we are caught up in daily tasks and may forget to slow down, take a breath and show appreciation to people who deserve it. We skip a thank you because we are in the middle of a discussion, or because we must write down an important idea, etc. But what if we run out of time and the chance to say thank you as often as it's deserved has come and gone? Our colleague and contact person for the U.S. branch, Mary, was rushed to the hospital, and after a courageous battle, left this world for a better place on September 15. She was 70 years old and worked hard for the past six years to help ROLDA USA grow. She did a marvelous job, but, sadly, she did not live long enough to fully reap the rewards of her labor. These lines are written from my heart, with grief, as a tribute to a modest and very talented person who kept ROLDA USA alive when we were taking small, stumbling baby steps toward a brighter future. She was a true friend who will never be forgotten. RIP Mary!

Message from Our Founder

The world is a vibrant and chaotic mess of organisms – both simple and complex – sometimes cooperating, sometimes competing, but always coexisting in either peace or conflict. Where does humanity fit in between earthworms and elephants? Are we essentially different from other mammals – competing for space and resources like any one of the millions of dogs fighting to survive in Romania's streets? I believe humanity exists in our fears, our loves, our worries and our joys– in the vast cauldron of emotions bubbling insideus.

However, humanity isn't exclusive to human beings – dogs possess profound humanity. We have bonded as species over thousands of years. They experience fear, joy, sadness and love. I have always found immense peace among dogs. They love unconditionally – unburdened by politics or prejudice – and only ask to be loved in return. I treasure their simplicity, loyalty and friendship.

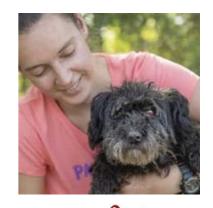

And so, the ignorance and cruelty of people sometimes overwhelms me. How anyone can be in the presence of these giving and innocent creatures and do nothing but shower them with care and affection is something that will forever elude me. I am terrified by the idea that I may one day become desensitized to their needs.

Because it is not all that difficult to become desensitized in a world that is rife with populism, nativism and misinformation, not to mention a perishing climate, a global pandemic and abject poverty ignored by corrupt politicians and demagogues. Instead of sharing their obscene wealth with a hungry and poor planet, billionaires spend their money on vanity space projects. No wonder some people see no point in trying for a better world. But I wonder to myself what can I do to change things? At first, I felt that one must accept their own limitations: I do not have the wealth and influence of a huge corporation. However, what I do have is the determination to change the small world around me and hope that in doing so I can inspire others to change theirs.

Instead of trying to save the world – save your world.

Even the smallest efforts – if consistent – can affect serious and lasting change. This will be my legacy: doing what I can for our dogs and the amazing team around me to whom I'll be forever grateful and forever loyal, the few people who never abandoned me or let me down.

Before my time on this world is over, I'll give everything I have to improve my own small corner of the universe and leave it the better for my having the gift of being born into it. Like me, you love animals and want their future to be safer. So tell me, what you will do with your gift of life?

Thank you for being with us in this journey!

Driven by Love: How and Why ROLDA Began

ROLDA is a small, internationally supported charity that helps abused, neglected and unwanted animals in Romania through a responsible, efficient and humane approach. Our programs serve animals in need, as well as pets with financially troubled owners such as senior citizens, retirees and unemployed people.

Vision

To build a world free from homeless, unwanted animals that suffer terribly on the streets, a world where every dog and cat has the opportunity to form a strong, lifelong bond with their human companions.

Mission

To build humane and sustainable habitats for abused animals and to create safer, cleaner habitats to benefit the people in Romania.

Over the years, people have often asked me: "If you could be anyone in the world, who would vou be?"

My name is Elena Daniela Costin, or Dana for short. I started ROLDA soon after I finished high school.

During my 20s, the stray population boomed all over Romania, including in my hometown Galati. My first rescue dog was a German shepherd I found wounded and bloody, abandoned in a local park after an illegal dog fight. Printz was the first dog my parents allowed to stay in our tiny apartment!

I have a story for most of the more than 21,000 dogs helped by ROLDA after Printz.

Putting the Perfect People in Key Roles

"When ROLDA started to reach out to the international community for financial support to help animals in need in Romania, I was a teenager, and the internet was a luxury in Romania. I was aware that my ambitious goal would be impossible with only local support due to indifference, lack of education about animal matters and, of course, widespread poverty. I became familiar with how charities from abroad manage their campaigns, and I felt envious of how relaxed wealthy charities were with spending," remembers Dana, the founder of ROLDA.

ROLDA is an atypical charity in many ways. We are a small charity, yet we have expanded outside Romania to countries like the UK, Australia, the US, Switzerland, Sweden and Norway. Still, we have never behaved as a large charity (and never will). To function in a foreign country, we need to be officially registered, operate within that country's laws and regulations, and have the right people to help us run the charity remotely.

Finding the right people to work with is more complicated than it sounds! If you consider the pressure to work around the clock to raise money for Romanian animals, the cultural differences, the language barrier, the difference of opinion about sensitive subjects related to animal welfare, the inherent situations in which some people promise to help but do not follow through, plus lots of other things – you realize that there is no manual, no guide for dummies on how to build the best international charity team. Like with many things in life, it too requires a combination of luck and past experiences that help you make better decisions while avoiding the same mistakes.

Getting ROLDA established on three continents is almost too scary to think about. In the beginning, we registered as a charity in Romania and the US. After registering in several other European countries, we expanded to Australia. It is one thing to be fortunate to find people to represent you abroad, but to work with them long term, you need to trust them with donations and sensitive information.

"Relationships with people are not as they are in fairy tales. ROLDA USA changed representatives three times, but the changes didn't mean I chose incorrectly. The first change happened when the co-founder of ROLDA USA left because of some personal matters (he got married and had different priorities). Our outstanding treasurer passed away last month entirely unexpectedly. We are on our third attempt to keep ROLDA USA going. We owe this to all the beautiful connections made with American supporters in the 15 years we've existed in the US," says Dana.

In Australia, ROLDA has an office and has started to fundraise. The "competition" is big, but our stories are special and genuine. We help animals directly and permanently, don't put healthy animals to sleep, and never give up.

Working to help Romanian animals is not just frustrating due to a lack of funding or the indifference in the local community. It is mind-blowing to know that although Romania has the worst stray problem in Europe, in the minds of large charities, Romanian animals are a lost cause. In fact, during a phone call with a senior representative of a large international animal charity, he told me exactly this: that the Romanian animal situation is hopeless. It was a moment of sincerity from his side because when I immediately reacted, he tried to correct his words. It is so sad to hear from an organization with millions of euros in profit that animals in Romania have no hope. For as long as ROLDA is around, you will never hear this from us. Hope was and is (and most likely will continue to be) motivation in the darkest days

"This was the first lesson I learned from scared, injured, barely breathing animals. I treasure their memory, and I respect everything the ROLDA team has been going through. I will never stop hoping. I will try to find the energy to give hope to others, and that's why the #givehope hashtag was added to our logo years ago," concludes Dana.

Finding the right people to work for ROLDA is a mixture of good luck and experience in dealing with people. Skilled professionals come with a hefty price tag that large charities are willing to cover, knowing that these employees may deliver bigger donations and better results. Charities like ROLDA struggle to improvise and be creative with a lack of certain kinds of expertise in our team. We are experts at saving dogs but not at fundraising or marketing!

We cannot afford thousands of dollars on a marketing strategy that doesn't bring immediate results because it takes away from our dogs each time we spend money on indirect support. Compared to large organizations operating in the same sector, which invest millions into fundraising, which have dedicated departments to handle supporters, to create marketing strategies and such, we don't have the luxury of waiting years for an investment in marketing to pay off.

Who can withstand such competition, a few thousand against millions? We do. Why? Because we never give up, because we live around stray dogs, majestic animals that teach us to fight until the end, to be survivors. We improvise, create, have sleepless nights, fear and get frustrated, but we never give up.

The people we are working with to fundraise online or to run the direct mail campaigns in Australia and the US are true #roldadogs heroes. Charities don't usually mention fundraising costs because this is not what their supporters want to hear, but remember what I told you about ROLDA being an atypical charity? We are proud because we work with good-hearted people to do marketing economically, efficiently and ethically. And yes, I repeat myself; I am proud of this team because, without them, the world out there (where animal lovers exist) wouldn't know about the plight of Romanian animals. After all, Romania is not a tourist destination. People rarely hear anything about our country, and wisely utilized marketing tools help us spread the story of our dogs on three continents.

People often hear that Romania is corrupt (and yes, this is true to a certain extent). Sadly, this is one of the reasons why large charities refuse to work in my country regularly. I must remind you that animals in Romania need their millions the most. But is Romania more corrupt than other countries? I am not sure. The news stories over the last few years have made me question the work of some of the larger charities. We have corrupt politicians, but France has an ex-President found guilty, and a prime minister in Austria is charged with corruption.

"I wanted to share a few thoughts about my experiences running a charity that only you (and our worldwide ROLDA supporters) care about. Large charities are finding excuses not to share the millions raised from donations from people like you, who want to help animals in need," Dana says.

Our efforts are further frustrated by a government that could care less and a community that needs education about animal welfare. We are starting at the grassroots level (running educational programs in schools), working to foster compassion and respect for animals among Romanian youth. We couldn't have achieved all that we have without the ROLDA international team and our amazing supporters who gave not just money but trust. We sincerely hope that the ROLDA values, compassion and hope, will be passed onto the next generation.

Together, we believe in this dream called ROLDA, and will never, ever lose hope.

The Beginning of the Stray Problem in Romania and the Horrific Consequences: Public Shelters

To understand the homeless dog crisis and the grotesque nature of public dog shelters in Romania (also referred to as PS on social media), you must know a little about the nation's recent history. Following World War II, the Soviet occupation enabled a communist uprising and the overthrow of the monarchy.

Until another revolution in 1989 and the toppling of dictator Nicolae Ceauşescu, much of Romania's wealth was stolen by the Soviets or was lost to corruption. Romania became a very poor nation as a result and remains one of the EU's poorest members. The economic hardship gave rise to illicit and illegal ways of making money – a secondary and seedy 'black market'. One of the particularly upsetting and gruesome trades to emerge from this underground economy were public dog shelters. Historically, these 'shelters' were abattoirs, within which dogs were brutally murdered, skinned, and dismembered for organic materials sellable within the fashion and cosmetics industries.

Under communism and Ceauşescu, the barbaric and disgusting practice of butchering dogs for their skin had kept the stray population in check. The collapse of the dictatorship lead to a freer press, the emergence of the internet, and Romania joining the EU. Leaders suddenly wanted to appear civilized in the eyes of the West, which precipitated a welcome end to this grisly practice. However, in the three decades since, the homeless dog population has skyrocketed. The vast concrete jungles of the industrial complexes created and abandoned by the Soviets served as perfect breeding hubs for stray dogs, offering some degree of shelter from the elements (Romania's winters are cruel and summers stifling). This boom in the stray dog population has, ironically, created a new market for public shelters.

Their income comes from public funds paid by the Romanian government according to the number of dogs they can 'remove' from the streets. They do not care about the welfare of animals; they euthanize at any opportunity and are not subject to regular or unannounced inspections to hold them accountable. The management does not care if the shelter has become a cesspool within which starvation, disease, and violence are commonplace. Much too frequently – and tragically– previously healthy dogs are brought into shelters and soon die from easily preventable illnesses and injuries.

Public Shelters Now

This situation was made much worse in 2013 when public shelters became permitted to euthanize 14 days post-capture, after an alleged attack in Bucharest by a pack of stray dogs that resulted in a child's death. Gentle and submissive dogs are easily captured, leaving the aggressive and feral dogs to reproduce. Additionally, trap, neuter, and return became illegal in Romania in 2016, so taking dogs from the streets frees up more resources for the dogs that remain in the wild. The only good outcome for dogs unfortunate enough to find themselves in a public shelter is the outside chance of adoption into a good home. However, owing to the repulsive conditions, the chance of adoption is slim. The conduct of the government and public shelters have contributed to an ever-growing stray dog population while allowing new public shelters to make easy money murdering homeless dogs.

Public shelters are grotesque killing houses that are a blight upon Romania.

Even if public shelters were not the terrible places they are, it's a pathetically inadequate solution to the crisis of 2.5million-plus dogs currently homeless and vulnerable in Romania. ROLDA's goal is to see that number reduce to 0, with every dog in a happy home. More than 2 million dogs cannot fit into public shelters. The issue must be tackled at its root: stop dogs breeding in the wild with humane and effective sterilization campaigns supported by public education, reduced abandonment rates, and the creation of clean and safe shelters from which dogs can be adopted.

In the meantime, ROLDA is adopting whenever possible from public shelters as life inside them is worse than in the wild. As often as we can, ROLDA takes dogs from that nightmare into our shelter and works to find them a loving home. Annually, this represents just 5 to 10 percent of the number of dogs that ROLDA rescues. It is essential that dogs are removed from the toxic atmosphere of public shelters as soon as possible. The longer they spend in these awful places, the longer they are exposed to violence and disease. The experience many dogs suffer in public shelters impacts them for life in the form of psychological scars. These dogs require much more time and resources to rehabilitate - it can cost thousands of pounds in specialist care - and some never recover enough to be rehomed. Many remain in our care.

ROLDA Awareness Movement in Romania

ROLDA provides care for homeless and abused dogs while transforming their lives by re-homing them into loving families. We pride ourselves in our holistic approach to reducing the number of strays and preventing animal abuse. Besides the sterilization campaigns developed to avoid the birth of unwanted pups and kittens, we are taking action to help deter different forms of cruelty.

Education locally and internationally is a long-term campaign to permanently reduce the suffering of Romanian stray animals.

At ROLDA we prefer not to print literature because we endeavor to plough as many donations as possible into rescuing abandoned and abused animals. But in some cases, printing literature is the only way!

What has ROLDA achieved lately for the community of Romanian animal lovers, and what are we planning?

The ROLDA Awareness Movement in Romania attempts to reach as broad an audience as possible. We have created:

Spay/Neuter Efforts Recognized by Nestle Continue

Last year, many restrictions inhibited outreach to poor communities on the spaying and neutering of pets. While we did not let that stop us, we did not spay or neuter as many animals as we wanted. We did, however, achieve some other worthy goals, including connecting with grant makers and obtaining funding from the UK and Switzerland, as well as from the USA. One grant came from the American beauty industry veteran and animal philanthropist Cathy Kangas and her friends.

We also were invited to join an award competition in Romania and won the grant provided by Nestle, which enabled us to do more sterilizations toward the end of the year and into 2022.

Delivering quality services to poor communities unable to afford medical care for their pets will reduce the number of puppies born to suffer, will decrease the number of abandoned animals, and will build a stronger bond with communities who appreciate our care.

Completed and New Projects

From September 2021, ROLDA expanded its support to the nearby county, Tulcea. The Danube River separates Galati and Tulcea counties (10 minutes by boat, which was the only connection between these two counties before the bridge was built). Tulcea is beautiful due to the Delta of Danube and has great potential to become a tourist attraction. However, the locals who mostly subsist through fishing are largely impoverished.

Poor communities have many problems, and animals are not a priority. Farm animals get more attention because of the benefits they provide (eggs, meat, milk etc.). Pets are poorly cared for and get no medical treatment. They reproduce freely, extending the suffering with innocent babies born to live in misery and neglect.

Volunteers from a local charity (The Great Catsby) primarily help cats but also dogs when possible. Their funds are tight, and the requests are overwhelming. Project Coordinator Madalina contacted ROLDA asking for support, and from that moment on, we contributed to support their mission:

Support the local public shelter with canned food.

Aid pets from poor communities.

Treat puppies found abandoned in the local cemetery against parvo.

Cover medical costs for cats with severe conditions requiring specialists, surgery and boarding in Bucharest clinics.

Save dogs and bring them to safety at ROLDA

Currently, ROLDA covers care bills ranging from a few hundred to a few thousand per month for the Tulcea project.

Testimonial from Madalina, coordinator of the project in Tulcea

"A few months ago, we were desperately reaching out for support from animal aid organizations around the world, as we are doing TNR and animal rescue in the small city of Tulcea, Romania, and we are simply overwhelmed with the situation of stray cats and dogs here. Very few have replied, and the only one that actually offered support was our neighbor based in Galati, ROLDA Foundation.

We are forever grateful to Dana and her team. She always says she wants to be able to do much more, but for us and the animals we are now able to help, this means a lot!

We are also very appreciative of the fact they decided to support fellow rescuers in Romania, and thus, animals outside their immediate reach, as this kind of cooperation is unfortunately not so common although so necessary. We couldn't have done all of this alone!

Thank you ROLDA and we hope you'll be by our side next year too!

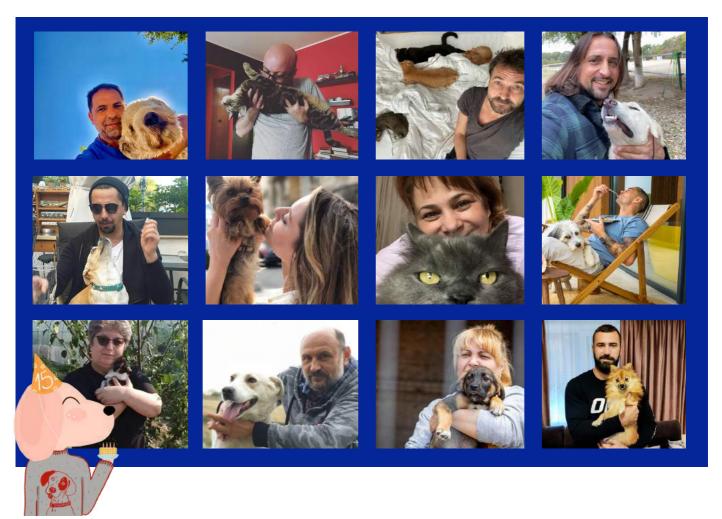

Hugs from us and from our rescued babies,

The Great Catsby team

Celebrating 15 Years with 12 Compassionate Celebrities

To celebrate this milestone with supporters spread all over the world, we decided to shorten the distances between us by sending mementos to our dear friends from Australia, the US and Europe.

2022 CALENDAR "give hope

In Romania, we created a special edition calendar with 12 celebrities (actors, musicians, chefs, sport players) who joined our celebration.

But years fly by, and we're already anticipating what our 20-year celebration will look like.

Since 2007, we have been working constantly to maintain the large shelter and keep it functioning. We repaired the roof, the floor affected by dog urine, replaced broken metal parts, and repainted the metal structure periodically to protect against corrosion. The entire shelter needs a complete redesign to continue to provide the best care for dogs who have no other safe place.

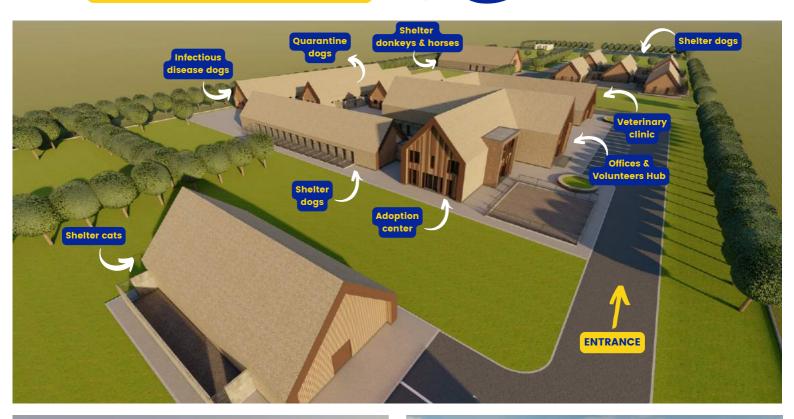

We are hoping that over the next years to be able to:

Reduce the size of this giant shelter (as some dogs get older and eventually die, some others get adopted, and as we reduce the number of intakes).

Renovate from the ground up the unused paddocks (which we will keep empty for this new challenge) to create insulated indoor/outdoor modern boxes with automatic waterer, resistant flooring, bedding lifted off the ground where dogs can sleep/relax, and an outdoor area for dogs to exercise and access a running zone.

This whole process of transformation is part of the ambitious PawzUp project.

Please read more about it here.

The financial assistance they provided in this time allowed me to keep my last remaining love - my dog. ROLDA helped me pay for the food and veterinary bills I could hardly afford during this harsh and lonely time. This act of kindness - reflected every day in my dog's happy grin and wagging tail – renewed my faith in people and compounded my love for animals. The adoration I feel for my dog is indescribable. It's obvious Dana shared precisely that same feeling, reflected in her kindness. Dogs change peoples' lives for the better. I want others to experience the same joy, love and companionship that ROLDA allowed me to keep. When my time on this earth comes to an end, I want my legacy to be sharing the happiness my dog has brought me. To this end, I will be leaving my home in my will to ROLDA, so they may help save more dogs and, in turn, save more people like me."

lonica has long been a close family friend. She and her husband were colleagues of my parents. Following the demise of their company, my father and eventually, lonica, were forced to look elsewhere for work. Ionica found employment abroad – in France – with her husband remaining at home to run a small family business. Unbeknownst to me, she visited my parents before leaving for France and later they told tell me she said, "Dana is one of those rare people that work so hard and inspired me to never give up and strive for better."

In those days, ROLDA was very much in its infancy. Despite working happily in France for some years, lonica rushed home after hearing that her husband had suffered a stroke; he remained gravely ill and required care. I'll forever be grateful to lonica. I lost my father in 2006 and she remained a close and present friend for my mother afterward. Still, I was surprised by an unexpected call from her with explosive news. She wished to leave her home to ROLDA at the end of her life. I was shocked – overwhelmed by the generosity and responsibility of such an incredible gift; I thought about refusing. lonica insisted. It was obvious she shared my passion for saving animals. She was impossible to dissuade. Like her, I have no children – our dogs are our family – and every penny I have when I depart this earth will be left to them.

I told her I would be honored to accept her gift, and it would be used to find thousands of homeless dogs a loving home like hers. It's very easy to dream of a better future and a kinder world. However, it is another thing entirely to bequeath everything you have to a cause you believe in. I'll spare Ionica any further details about her gift. Judgements of such a kind are highly personal and private. But I will say that I, ROLDA and the thousands of little, canine hearts her kindness will touch are immeasurably grateful.

This is a sacrifice I pray future generations will not have to make because the world will be a place where our leaders and governments take adequate care of our weak and vulnerable – both human and animal alike. The message I would like to end on – the message I would like you to take from lonica – is she acted decisively on her instinct to leave the world a better place than she found it. Our duty is always – first and foremost – to our loved ones. As I care for our dogs and my mother, you care for your parents, your spouse or children. However, creating a better world for our loved ones requires a commitment today.

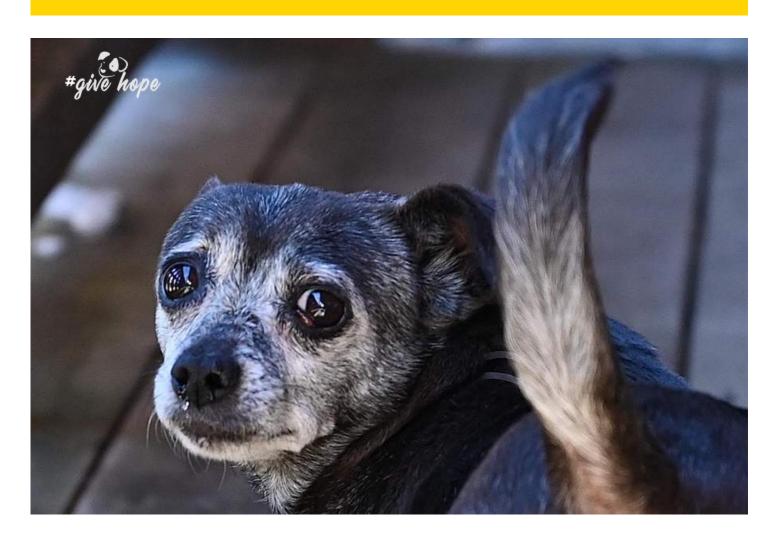

I ask you to ask yourself what I have asked myself: "What do I want my life to have meant? "I think, beyond our families, we have a secondary duty to others – to the planet – to the other forms of life with which we are lucky to share this earth. Leaving a gift in our wills to a good cause is a form of immortality. The lives you'll touch will be for generations. I implore you – like Ionica, like myself – please decide upon your posthumous wishes before it is too late. Whatever your cause, do not delay and let lawyers and taxmen pick at the bones of your estate.

Learn from Ionica: act now, act decisively and act compassionately. Leaving a gift in your will to a cause such as ROLDA will give you a peace of mind in the present and a presence in the future. Look after your sons and daughters but look after the world they'll inherit too!

Testimonial from Ryan and Lisa who adopted Tom

"We adopted 'Tom' from ROLDA in February 2021 and it was the best decision we could have made. I had travelled to Eastern Europe previously and fell in love with the street dogs and their independent, confident, yet lovable spirits. However, they are often neglected and have to fight for food or are abused by people who see them as a nuisance.

Looking for a dog specifically from this area of the world proved to be a logistical nightmare until I found ROLDA. Dana worked with us to determine the type of dog we wanted and she was extremely responsive in regards to sending pictures and videos of Tom before we decided to take the chance. Everything was transparent and legitimate when it came to the adoption process.

Tom arrived at the local airport, very much a different dog than what he is now. At first he was so scared to even come inside that we had to carry him inside. Over the course of the next few months he began to come out of his shell.

He has turned out to be a loyal, lovable, cuddly, sweet dog who loves to lay around and relax. He gets along well with other people and animals. Clearly he appreciates a calm home where he can lay around and relax as much as possible.

We would 100% recommend that you adopt from ROLDA. Not only do you get a dog who needs a loving and reliable home but you also get a best friend who appreciates you and knows that you saved him from the streets. I have had many dogs over my life but Tom is something very, very special. "
